A BOY FATALLY CRUSHED

WILL CARTER, SEVENTEEN, INJURED IN NEWS OFFICE MAILING ROOM.

Caught Between the Elevator and Wall-His Death Occurred at City Hospital.

Will Carter, seventeen years of age, and living at 1404 East Tenth street, was taken to the City Hospital about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon fatally injured by being crushed at the News mailing room between the elevator car and the wall of the shaft. He died about 10 o'clock last night.

Carter was employed by Bert Berryman who has a number of News routes, and his duty was to go to the mailing room and get bundles of papers which he distributed from street-cars along the line for which house to house carriers wait.

The elevator is started and stopped by a cable and may be operated either from the car or the floor of the building. When Carter arrived yesterday afternoon the car was at the lower floor. He gave the cable a pull and started the car swiftly upward. Neglecting to stop it on a level with the floor where he was, it continued upward and raised the safety gate. This left an opening of about eighteen inches between the bottom of the gate and the floor of the car and through this opening Carter tried to dive or jump, evidently with the idea of getting onto the car to stop it.

About the time he jumped the gate began to descend and he was caught between it and the floor of the car. Not being able to 1:20. It was manifest at the outset that tor carried up into the shaft and crushed between the floor of the car and the wall. His body was cut but little but he was crushed internally and the wall above the door was forced outward and gave evidence of the great pressure to which his body was subjected. Mark Barrett, an employe in the mailing room, first saw the accident and as quickly as possible stopped the elevator. It was found necessary in order to release Carter to run the elevator back to the mailing room floor, when Carter fell through the gateway. He was taken at once to the City Hospital and there it was found he was badly crushed internally. He was a student at the High School and a member of the school's athletic association.

NEW INSURANCE RATES.

Mr. Goodioe Outlines the Schedule to Be Put Into Effect.

Thornton M. Goodloe, of the Indianapolis Fire Inspection Bureau, announced yesterday that the new rate schedule will go into effect to-morrow morning in the territory bounded by the south side of Ohio street, the west side of Alabama street, the north side of Louisiana street and the east side of Capitol avenue. When the schedule has been applied to this territory it will be extended gradually over the rest of the city.

building," and the rates vary as buildings and New York streets. These halts, comvary from the described standard. Improvements tending to reduce the liability of fire lessen the rate of insurance, and it is this fact, insurance men say, that will make the new scheme work toward better construction. It also is pointed out in behalf of the new schedule that it makes each insurer bear his equitable portion of the insurance tax. In the past, it is said, agents have reduced rates far below the profit mark in order to get large lines of nsurance; large department store risks have been unprofitable, while small stores have paid such large premiums that the osses on them to the insurance companies

The reduction on account of the fire protection afforded by this city is 381/2 per cent., which contemplates improvements anticipated and in progress.

A number of women lived on the island in tents and shanties, and men were entertained there in the wildest manner. There was no the instruction and training they had rerelaxation of discipline even after the tenis had fallen at 10 a. m. yesterday, when "the general" was sounded from brigade headquarters and taken up by the buglers throughout the camp. General McKee's instructions were that no depredations were to be committed, and these were obeyed to the letter. A bonfire of straw was accidentally started in the lower part of the noon. Second Regiment's quarters, and for a time it seemed as if the buildings in that part of the grounds would be consumed by the spreading flames, but Colonel Smith quickly ordered a detachment to go to the spot with buckets and extinguish the fire.

The number of visitors that came to bid their friends and relatives among the soldiers a last farewell was surprisingly small. Possibly this accounted for the smooth and orderly manner in which the troops accomplished their departure from the camp There was little or no confusion anywhere in the grounds, despite the necessary hurry and bustle of packing and moving camp equipage and supplies. The soldiers packed everything in neat manner, and moving vans drove rapidly about hither and thither, gathering up their loads. In a remarkably short space of time the camp presented a

Promptly at five minutes before 1 o'clock the various commanding officers of regiments and of the artillery battalion began preparations for the march to the city. At the same time General McKee and his numerous staff mounted their horses in front of brigade headquarters and moved slowly down the main driveway, an imposing cav-

The unusually protracted drought had converted the road into dust to a depth of about six inches, and the feet of the marching host, assisted by a lively breeze, quickly raised and sent in all directions immense clouds of choking dirt. The line of march was along the main when the column turned into that thoroughfare and proceeded straight into the

There were few incidents on the march to the city. About the first diversion was furnished by the Pentecosters, who gathered in groups in front of their tented city and sang hymns and shouted canting phrases at the hot and weary troops. "Don't forget your souls, men," shouled a gaunt, bewhiskered member of the band. 'We are thinking about something to drink," retorted a soldier, whose face was flery red and whose tongue almost lolled out from excessive heat and thirst. "Have a tract," said a fat woman, as she shoved into unwilling hands copies of a thrilling story entitled "The Miner's Last

Soon after the Pentecost tents were passed the troops reached the corner of Alabama and Fortieth streets, where there is plenty of shade, and here General Mc-Kee sent word along the great column to halt and rest a few minutes. Quickly as the order passed along men made a grand rush to positions under trees and sank down in heaps, well-nigh exhausted. Another halt was made at Meridian and Fourteenth streets, and a final stop at Meridian bined with the fine shade along almost the entire length of Meridian street, made the march bearable. Canteens were filled with water before the start was made from the camp, but the liquid soon became tepid and unfit to drink, and the thirsty soldiers resorted to all sorts of subterfuges to cool their parched throats. At every place where residents on Meridian street were sprinkling the street in front of their dwellings the "boys in blue" rushed eagerly towards the hose and applied their mouths to the nozzles, taking long draughts and heaving sighs of unmistakable satisfaction. Here and there a woman had been thoughtful enough to provide glasses and tin cups, knowing the soldiers would pass by, and that they probably would

It was a common sight to see soldiers the water in their canteens to mois ten handkerchiefs to place in their hats. Being unfit to drink, they nevertheless disliked to waste it.

ARTILLERY MEN HAD FUN. The artillerymen had plenty of amusement coming down to the city. At frequent intervals they would lag behind the column for several squares and then, whipping up their horse, dash at a mad gallop back into line again. The members of the hospital corps, who brought up the rear of the procession with the ambulance, objected strenuously to this procedure of the artillery, but to no avail. One of these wild runs was made from a distance of four squares and was thoroughly appreciated by the spectators along the line of march There was a scarcity of people on Meridian street north of New York, due, probably, to the fact that the march was made | House, in the middle of the afternoon at a time when men are at their places of business down town. When New York street was reached, however, the troops began passing through lines of spectators and this remained the case until the station was reached. The largest crowds were in Monument place and at the Statehouse. Here the troops were cheered to the echo. In response to these plaudits the soldiers gave company "yells," which had no doubt been prepared for the occasion. On the plaza in front of the east entrance of the Capito milding were gathered all the state officers, deputies and clerks, constituting a reception committee of more than respecta-

The guard, as a whole, stood the long. hot and tedious march admirably. The ambulance picked up only six men during the entire duration of the march, which was two hours, the column starting from the fair grounds about 1:30 and reaching the depot at 3:30. The men taken care of by the ambulance corps were: Louis Tinsley, Company M. Third; Ed Helwig, of the brigade hospital corps; Oscar Lov, Company A. Second; Eugene Butts, Company M. Second; Carl Weber, Company M. Second; Warren Lacy, Company M. Second. A large number of men dropped out of ine and took street cars for the depot, not being overcome by the heat to any serious extent, but suffering somewhat from exhaustion. There were about forty of these. Major Hawkins, chief surgeon of the First Infantry Regiment, said that the men of that regiment ought to have medals for Many of the officers were forced to dismount on account of the congested condition of the thoroughfare. Talk of a freight depot for the interurban cars was in the air constantly. Before General McKee rode to his home ifter getting his men safely to the depot was asked if he rejoiced at the closing of the camp of instruction. "Not at all," he replied. "I am sorry it is over. We had ust begun to get the real benefit of the up. I think the encampment ought to last about ten or twelve days. If it were strung out any more than that, however, a reaction would set in and the men would become listless and we would have to take fresh start." Nearly every officer in the ational Guard was asked the same queson that was put to General McKee, and ill expressed themselves as regretful that the camp had terminated. When the procession reached the German House the band was playing "The Watch on the Rhine" and the Turners were singing it. As they marched into the garden the women at the tables rose up and waved their handkerchiefs, and the men cheered. The throng then formed for the kommers. During the festival, which lasted well into the night, speeches were made by Phillip Rappaport, Otto Stechhan, Mrs. Schulmeyer, president of the women's section, and several others. The garden was full of comradeship and enthusiasm for the Turnverein and its prosperity.
